The good of Christianity is in the distribution of its good. Probably more than two thousand millions of dollars, annually expended in the business countries of the world, are for the most part devoted to common trade enlightenment, while but little money is used to announce the only indispensable human commodity, --Christianity. We are of this world, and until we are of another world we must handle holy things along the lines of our understanding, and we must not mishandle them by methods which we do not understand. The Bible is but a simple, intelligible translation of Holy Writ into the common writ of the people, and barring the few mysterious passages, it is the only absolutely perfect example of expressed simplicity....
