It is now fast verging on sixty years since an old gentleman, who was at once very wealthy and very singular in his habits, occupied a roomy, castellated house, distant some fifteen or twenty miles from the abbey we have just left. His wife had been dead for many years, and the only being about whom he cared was a daughter, just escaping from her teens, and adorned with all the beauty that belongs to the sex. For her to express a wish, was to have it gratified; for the old man doated on her immoderately, and never thought...
